Mrs. Cranston hesitated. "When do you look for Kitty to come?" she asked. "Next week, toward the end, I think, mamma. She wanted to stay over for the guards' ball. Then she'll be ready for a rest here.'

Mrs. Cranston pinched Lydia's fire reddened cheek caressingly. "Don't ou miss all those things, dearest?"

"Not one bit, mamma." Lydia gave her mother her eyes trustingly. "In fact, sometimes I'm just a little ashamed of all I went through since I realize the beauty of this full, vigorous life here in the mountains. Mother, I can have a better time on Prince, galloping helter skelter over these roads and fields, than I ever had vying with other girls for the most dances and favors in the german with a lot of boys. I want to teach them, to encourage them, not to believe in their degradation. Mamma, just the other day I saw an old woman selling eggs from a wagon at the gate, and in the wagon was her daughter, poorly dressed, but her features were finely drawn, and when I stopped to speak to them the girl looked at me as if I were a princess. Oh, mamma, that sort of thing cuts me. I have not done anything to deserve that, and, poor thing, what has she in store for her? Nothing but to fall into the sort of life her mother is

"That's all true," agreed Mrs. Cranston, "but there are different grades of society, and we can't alter the condition." Then the speaker's face became more rigid, her tone tense and tentative. "And the mixing of the elements, my dear," she put in guardedly, "sometimes produces sad complications. You remember how Hallie Dunwoody married beneath her in Lexington and that it actually killed her father and broke up a happy

Mrs. Cranston sat perfectly still; she seemed hardly breathing. She was very anxious to have her next remark seem casual.

"I have never heard you say before what you thought about that marriage, dear, but I never thought Hallie treated her father and mother right."

"No, she didn't," answered Lydia. "Hallie knew the extent of her father and mother's pride, and she had no right to crush it for her own selfish desires, and even those of her husband, she would have been happier in the consciousness of having done her duty. I don't think self sacrifice has ever brought about bad resultsin the long run."

was all aglow as she bent and kissed Lydia good night.

Going down to the major, she said: T've had a very, very satisfactory talk subject!" she hastened to correct as he raised his brows in surprise, "but ticularly for George Buckley she realize that she was drifting in that resist. direction she would pull herself up."

"Well, I'm glad she's that sensible." said the major as his eye fell to the paper and began to search for a remembered paragraph. "I didn't think she was a fool."

According to this information the Japanese have about 300,000 men in the armies operating against General Kuropatkin, rendering it too hazardous for him to risk a general

A FINE MEMORIAL

Terre Haute Millionaire Perpetuates His Mother's Memory.

Terre Haute, Ind., Aug. 11.-The cornerstone of the "Emeline Fairbanks Library" was laid yesterday afternoon under the auspices of the Indiana grand lodge of Masons. When the contract was let last fall it was expected to have the building complet ed by this time, but difficulties in getting the stone from the Green river (Kentucky) quarries caused the delay. It is the building which Crawford Fairbanks is to give to the city as a me morial to his mother. The contract price is $55,000 for the building ready to receive the furniture. The site cost the city $10,000. This amount and more the city will realize from the sale of the property now used for a library two blocks away. The Green river stone, of which the building will be made, is of peculiar formation and quality and may be said to be a geological freak. The stone is now all here. The architects say that it is durable and will take a polish like marble. Its striking peculiarity is that when first quarried it is a dirty, greasy color. It is full of oil, which prevents it collecting dust and it whitens with exposure, so that at the end of a year or two it is clear white and remains

Other medicines only gave relief. After taking FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE the result was surprising. A few doses started the brick dust, like fine stones, etc., and now I have no pain across my kidneys and I feel like a new man. FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE has done me $1,000 worth of good."
